RED FANG

by Seantos

From the ashes rises the phoenix, which is an apt way to view Red Fang's past, since three-fifths of the band came from former local legends "Party Time." For those not fortunate enough to see Party Time in their heyday, do not fear—Red Fang fulfills and surpasses the template Party Time established, the difference being a more direct and interesting musical onslaught. What Red Fang does so well is play a style of music that borrows on a lot of musical forms without succumbing to their boring aspects. For example, they play touches of stoner rock minus the obligatory 20-minute jam; or they play math-style rock but with more natural grooves that sound like they have had sex in between learning to play their instruments.

While the vocals are still a work-in-progress (you try playing guitar riffs and singing; I sure know I can't), Red Fang is making wrong sound strong and oh-so-right. I caught up with the band for a little Q&A even though they have a reported distaste for such, or in the words of their guitarist Brian Giles, "I hate interviews."

Exotic: Did you ever think of getting a lead singer?

Aaron (bass): Well, we never thought we would have Brian and me lead-singing.

John (drummer): We already had four members, and five seemed too much.

Aaron: We also thought about Sean Croghan (Jr. High and Crackerbash) being our lead singer.

X: Are you comfortable singing?

Aaron: I started relatively recently, but it is getting more comfortable.

X: So Brian, when Party Time broke up, did you ever think you would be coming back to Portland to start a band?

Brian: It didn't even cross my mind. I just needed to get the hell out of Portland.

X: So John, did you do a European tour with Bad Wizard during this time?

John: No, I did a U.S. tour and recorded an album with Bad Wizard.

X: So did you get paid to record with Bad Wizard?

John: Uhh...no, but I had a lot of good times on the road.

X: So when you started the band did you have the name Red Fang picked out? (Aaron erupts into laughter)

John: Like most bands we had a thousand shitty funny names.

Aaron: It was the least offensive; I think it came from Black Tooth.

David (guitar): We actually played a New Year's Eve show as Panda.

X: Funny, but aren't there a thousand Panda band names?

Aaron: When we picked Red Fang we found out there was a band called White Fang, and of course there is also the band Fang.

Brian: We thought about the band name for a long time. It got to the point where as long as I don't hate it, it's fine. It's not too amazing.

Aaron: Neither is Metallica.

Brian: No...Metallica, that's pretty good.

X: Do you ever take any riffs from other bands you have been in?

David: Today we were listening to some tapes and said, "That's a good riff, we'll take it."

John: Oh, yeah, that was an old Party Time riff; now it's a new KICK ASS Red Fang song.

X: Do you have management?

Brian: Yeah, John Sherman Management.

John: Our problem is we've got no one to pay for our shit right now so we've got to pay for all of the recording costs, booking, and merch on bartender's wages.

Aaron: Or unemployment with no unemployment.

John: But it is tough to lose money when you don't have any money. We are in the process of having someone put out our album before we go out on tour this summer.

X: Is it a full-length?

John: Side A of a full-length.

X: Your next gig?

John: April 28th at The Towne Lounge with Birds of Avalon.

Elle

The PDXBlackBook.com site was conceived to feature the spirit of performance within the exotic dancer world.

Performers like Elle are shaping a new erotic art form, mixing elements of burlesque, pole work and unique styles never before seen in the world of exotic dance.

With exclusive photography, bios, schedules and a growing VIP gallery you'll be sure to get the low down on the top entertainers in the great Pacific Northwest.

Log in and be a part of a great community!
